

Want to spend less time studying and get better grades?

Dear Student,

If you're like most students, you wish you didn't have to study so much.

Studying takes a lot of time, time that could be spent on other things like friends, family and getting a job.

Fortunately for you, you're probably doing quite a few things wrong.

"Fortunately?!"

Yep.

Here's the thing: you have your study habits and you like to do things certain ways. Some ways work better than others, but you've probably never taken an in-depth look at the way you study. If you did, you'd probably realize you could do a lot more in a lot less time.

I was just like you

I was in the same boat as you for a good chunk of my schooling, right up through high school. I did dual-enrollment at my local college and, though I did manage to balance things out pretty well, school still took up a lot of my time. A lot more than I wanted.

When I got into college, I found myself even shorter on time. Something had to change, so I started doing some research. I looked at how I studied... how I read, how I took notes, how I studied for tests.

And in my sophomore year, things changed.

I won't say that it was magical, because it wasn't.

I will say that I suddenly had more time than I knew what to do with.

I won't say that studying instantly became completely effortless, because it didn't.

I will say that I became a lot more efficient at learning and retaining information.

I spent less time studying and more time doing things that I loved.

Oh, and I still managed to graduate with a 3.94 GPA.

I'm finally sharing my secrets

Today, I'd like to share with you the secrets of my success as a student.
